Learn how to foster socially inclusive communities and empower individuals and families to change their lives for the better.

Be prepared to think critically about social issues and act politically to help create change.

Meet the Expert

Christine Craik

Christine Craik is a social work lecturer at RMIT and the National Vice-President of the Australian Association of Social Workers (AASW).

I worked in the field for 30 years, in casework, advocacy and social action, so my teaching is based on a lot of experience. I don’t think you can do one without the other.

I was inspired to teach in this field because I wanted social workers to come out of university with an eye for action as well as casework.

The philosophy of social work at RMIT is cutting edge, with a critical approach to meet the needs of our changing society. I’m really pleased to be part of this environment.

Why study social work?

Few careers offer you the opportunity to advocate and be a positive force for change the way social work can.

If you see yourself making a real difference in the world and want a career that’s in demand, there’s never been a better time to study social work.

As part of the degree:

- You’ll learn from passionate and engaged members of society, who actively work towards a fairer world for all.
- You’ll have the opportunity to put your skills into practice and connect with the industry through work-integrated learning placements.

Career outlook

Prepare to join a sector that might see you assisting individuals, formulating and implementing social policies, participating in social research or managing and developing programs to assist community groups, individuals and families.

As a social worker you’ll have a truly flexible career where you can work in many settings, including:

- housing
- drug and alcohol services
- asylum seeker and refugee services
- disability services
- domestic violence
- primary and secondary schools
- allied health
- child protection.

Bachelor of Social Work (Honours)

BH105  City  4 years full-time
VTAC 3200331101  ATAR (2017: 77.05)
rmite.edu.au/programs/bh105

In this program you will study courses in social work theory and practice, sociology, politics, policy and research.

Field education forms a large component of the program to develop your practical experience, networks and career opportunities. In the third and fourth years, you’ll undertake two 70-day placements, usually within human services and community service organisations.

Your placement in third year will focus on direct practice with individuals, families and small groups. The fourth year placement involves the integration of theory and macro-level practice.

Bachelor of Social Work (Honours) / Bachelor of Social Science (Psychology)

BH106  City  5 years full-time
VTAC 3200333351  ATAR (2017: 90.00)
rmite.edu.au/programs/bh106

Social workers and psychologists often work side-by-side in organisations where expertise in both areas is required.

This double degree combines our two highly respected programs to give you a unique and broad grounding.

Learn about social work theory and practice as well as cognitive, developmental and biological psychology, mental health, and research.

You’ll also learn about law in social work, including working with violence and abuse, and study advanced courses on psychological assessment and psychopathology.

You’ll develop skills in program management and evaluation and put them to practice in two 70-day field placements in your third and fifth years.

Youth Work

Pave the way for future generations by addressing the social, behavioural, welfare, developmental and protection needs of young people.

As a youth worker you’ll provide emotional and practical support to young people between the ages of 10 and 25, by helping to develop their skills and confidence, while securing their well-being and connection to their community.

Why study youth work?
You are passionate about working with young people and want to have a positive, long-lasting effect on society’s development.

Career outlook
The role of a youth worker is diverse, with many exciting and challenging career opportunities that involve working in:

- schools
- residential care facilities
- youth centres
- health clinics
- community centres.

What you will study
RMIT’s youth work programs will prepare you with the skills and knowledge to create environments in which all young people can explore their individual and collective capabilities and thrive intellectually, physically and creatively.

Dorothy Bertrand
Diploma of Youth Work

When I was in a really rough part of my life, I had a youth worker reach out to me and she saved my life. Sometimes all it takes is one person to change a life, and since that person changed mine, I made it my goal to hopefully be that person for someone else.

RMIT has provided me with so many skills and helped me develop as a person. I now know what to do in difficult situations and how to report them, how to be a leader and how to be a balanced worker in a highly demanding field.

The biggest highlight of my studies was working alongside Victoria Police, as part of the Ropes Program, which gives young offenders a second chance.

Bachelor of Social Science (Youth Work)

I chose RMIT’s Youth Work degree because of the field education opportunity and the excitement of a new continent.

My first placement was with Australian Youth Climate Coalition (AYCC) assisting the National Program Coordinator, which allowed me to get involved with major projects.

My second placement was at a very highly involved youth organisation in Phnom Penh, Cambodia. I was given important tasks such as attending a meeting at the Senate, writing a final report and applying for funding. It was a great achievement to see the organisation receive funding from two major organisations and the European Union during my stay.

In this degree you’ll study global history, global political processes, international political economy, human mobility, global governance, and international human rights law.

You will explore the intercultural and cross-cultural dimensions of international management, social research, public policy and project management.

Apply your learning in a two-month international internship and 7000-word independent research project.

You will also increase your employability by studying a language as part of this degree.

Natassia Bell

Bachelor of Arts (International Studies)

I was drawn to the practical aspect of the RMIT degree, particularly the internship. International studies focuses a lot on real-life issues, and so most of the assignments we do are based on real-time world events. We also have to do a lot of our work in pairs or groups, so we learn how to work with people that might be very different from ourselves, to produce something of quality.

Recently we participated in a mock United Nations conference. The event itself was a five-hour conference, but the preparation leading up to the event was an entire semester’s work. This was one of the most interesting yet difficult assessments I have done, but it was also very fun.
