Diploma of Vocational Education and Training

Develop advanced teaching and assessment skills to lead others in vocational education and training.

Who is this program for?
RMIT’s Diploma of Vocational Education is ideal for those looking to be leaders in the Vocational Education and Training space. Graduates build their teaching expertise to address complex needs of students and their learning environments while developing tools to constantly review and build their performance.

It is recommended that applicants have completed the Certificate IV in Training and Assessment or another relevant qualification alongside vocational experience in training and assessment roles within an Registered Training Organisation (RTO) or similar organisation. Alternatively you may have extensive relevant vocational experience in training and assessment.

How will I learn?
The Diploma of Vocational Education and Training is delivered online over two semesters using Canvas, RMIT’s Learning Management System. Interactive webinars, forum discussions, problem solving or research based activities will see students engage in a range of learning modes. Practical requirements and employability skills embedded in this program focus on enhancing students’ teaching practice and work readiness.

What are my career outcomes?
Graduates can expect to be eligible for roles as leading trainers and assessors, co-ordinators or managers with responsibilities in delivering teaching and assessment.
